The " Ekek " can transform into a huge bird / bat at night and prowls. The " Ekek " looks for a sleeping pregnant woman. Then it extends a very long proboscis into the womb and kills the ...

In the mystical hours of night, the enigmatic Ekek emerges, a creature of eerie transformation, bringing ominous omens in Philippine folklore.

While this happens, it is said that there is a sound of "ex-ex-ex-ex." When he is close to the hunting, he deliberately makes a small crying sound, and he also has a cleverness ...

The Ekek is a fearsome, winged humanoid from Philippine mythology known for its night-time predation. It transforms into a huge bird or bat and uses a long proboscis to drain the blood of ...

Ekek, also known as Ek Ek, are bird-like creatures found in Philippine mythology. They have wings and are covered in feathers, which give them the ability to fly. The feathers are usually ...

Similar to the Manananggal, the Ekek looks for sleeping pregnant women. Then it extends a very long proboscis into the womb and kills the fetus by draining its blood.

They are usually described as flying creatures that look like the Manananggal, but are unable to divide or split their body in the way that the Manananggal does. The Ekek is also associated ...
